

CCCO expands and enhances workinculture.ca website

HR and career development information for Ontario arts and culture

August 16, 2006: Cultural Careers Council Ontario (CCCO) is delighted to launch its improved and expanded cultural human resources and career development website www.workinculture.ca. CCCO appreciates the support of the Ontario Trillium Foundation and the Ontario Arts Council for the redevelopment of the website.

As well as featuring CCCO's own programs and publications, www.workinculture.ca shares HR and career development information and expertise from other arts and culture organizations across Ontario.

Check out these features on www.workinculture.ca

- Free Job Board: Post jobs and look for jobs in arts and culture. Content and access is flexible and accessible for employers and job seekers. Our popular job board is easier to use than ever - and still free!
- HR Tools series: Well-regarded downloadable publications created specifically for cultural workers and managers
- Tips and Templates: Quick, concise information on HR topics such as hiring, conflict resolution, volunteers, terminations, and training
- Courses and publications from arts and culture organizations across Ontario
- Thoughtfully selected and well-organized links

Tell CCCO about your HR programs and publications

If your organization is producing HR and career development seminars, workshops, or publications that are accessible and relevant to Ontario's cultural community, please let us know at info@workinculture.ca and we'll include it on our website.

Have you previously posted a job on CCCO's website?

If you've previously posted jobs on www.workinculture.ca, you'll have to re-register to post a job on the new site. Visit the Job Board to register and get a password.

CCCO's website was created by ecentricarts

CCCO's website was built and designed by ecentricarts inc., a website company with many cultural and not-for-profit clients, including Opera.ca, The Canadian Textile Museum, and The Foster Parents Plan. For more info, visit www.ecentricarts.com.
